THE LANGUAGE OF 'WE'

In the article, Great! What's Next?, Jurriaan Kamp quotes renowned symphony conductor, Benjamin Zander, as he reflects on the dynamic of making music:

“A symphony orchestra is an amazing organism: so many different instruments and musicians playing together to create a single work of music...the aim of the orchestra is to make sure that every voice is heard. If both the trumpet and the viola are going to be heard, the trumpet has to listen to the viola because the trumpet is much louder than the viola. This requires great discipline. An orchestra is a conversation about ‘we’.

“So wouldn't it be great if, instead of only talking about adding more, and more to the bottom line, companies started a new conversation: We have enough of this; now let's work together to have more of that. We need to understand that we live in a world where if one country goes down, we all go down – we all need to flourish in order for all of us to grow. That's the symphony orchestra model!”

Sometimes we act out of self-centeredness – a negative unloving spirit – and not out of the compassionate, loving Spirit of the Gospel. When this spirit of arrogance and greed predominates, our own wants and interests disintegrate into a noisy tangle of out-of-sync instruments and the whole structure collapses.

A true work of art – a harmonious composition– will only survive if it is built on the hard work of forgiveness, humility, and generosity of spirit. If we are to play the music that God places in every human heart, we must welcome and encourage everyone to raise their voices and contribute the sound and skill of their own instruments – the masterpiece produced from the language of ‘we’.

The pathway of Jesus testifies to the reality that only the power of the Holy Spirit can truly heal and transform in life-giving ways. The Spirit of truth, reconciliation and mercy allows the dignity of every ‘instrument of God's living orchestra’. Under the Spirit's masterful direction, we in turn learn to become attuned to one another – not only to our immediate circle of family or friendship groups – but in ever-expanding circles of universal conversation. Once again, the language of ‘we’ allows each of us to play our part in the great symphony of Creation – a beautiful song of peace and harmony sung by every life and heart.
